Cullen, Christopher. Astronomy and mathematics in ancient China: the Zhou bi suan jing. Cambridge, New York, Cambridge University Press, 1995. xiv, 241 p. illus. (Needham Research Institute studies, 1)

"This is a study and translation of the Zhou bi suan jing, a Chinese work on astronomy and mathematics which reached its final form around the first century AD. The author provides the first easily accessible introduction to the developing mathematical and observational practices of ancient Chinese astronomers and shows how the generation and validation of knowledge about the heavens in Han dynasty China related closely to developments in statecraft and politics."

Dear, Peter R. Discipline & experience; the mathematical way in the scientific revolution. Chicago, University of Chicago Press, 1995. 290 p. facsimis. (Science and its conceptual foundations)

Contents: Introduction. The measure of all things.—1. Induction in early-modern Europe.—2. Experience and Jesuit mathematical science: the practical importance of methodology.—3. Expertise, novel claims, and experimental events.—4. Apostolic succession, astronomical knowledge, and scientific traditions.—5. The uses of experience.—6. Sculpting with the environment—a natural dialogue. Edited by Baile Oakes. New York, Van Nostrand Reinhold, 1995. 251 p. illus. (part col.), plans.

Contains essays by Suzi Gablik, Fritjof Capra, and Thomas Berry, and descriptions of a number of contemporary works involving the sun or the night sky. Among these are creations by the following artists: Robert Adzema (sundials); Peter Erskine ("Secrets of the Sun," a traveling, site-specific installation); Nancy Holt ("Sun Tunnels" in the Great Basin desert of Utah, "Annual Ring," Saginaw, Mich., "Sky Mound Landfill Site," Meadowlands, N.J., and "Dark Star Park," Arlington, Va.); Baile Oakes ("Gestation," a winter solstice marker in Santa Monica, Calif., and "Silver Sands Park," a solar calendar irrigation system in Palm Desert, Calif.); Charles Ross (a solar prism installation in Dallas, Tex., and "Star Axis," in Las Vegas, N.M.); James Turrell ("Roden Crater," at Flagstaff, Ariz.); and Phyllis Yampolsky ("Sun, Radants, and Shadow," a yearly event held at a summer solstice festival in North Brooklyn). In addition, several earlier monuments are discussed —Casa Rinconada, Machu Picchu, and Jai Singh's instruments.

Abt, Helmut A., and Hongnan Zhou. What fraction of astronomers become relatively inactive in research after receiving tenure? In Astronomical Society of the Pacific. Publications, v. 108, Apr. 1996: 375–377. illus.

In "a study of 214 tenured astronomers at 17 of the major astronomical centers in the U.S." the authors found "that 48% of the astronomers published more papers per year after receiving tenure than before and 33% published between half and the same number of papers per year as before tenure ... We found no numerical characteristics that allow one to predict who will become relatively inactive in research after receiving tenure."

A biographical sketch is followed by lists of primary editions published from the 18th century to the present, primary bibliographic sources, monographic publications about Kepler, and further secondary literature. The main part of the bibliography, which follows these lists, describes in detail and provides library locations for 76 published works by Kepler, in chronological sequence of first editions, with any later printings listed below the entry for the original edition. These entries are grouped in four sections: publications other than calendars issued during Kepler's lifetime, posthumous publications, calendars produced in Graz, and calendars produced in Linz.

Dünnhaupt's bibliography, published 1990–93, occupies six volumes (4723 p.). The sixth includes a subject index that provides references to works on astrology, astronomy, comets, and eclipses by other writers of the period, such as Athanasius Kircher, Johann Praetorius, Johann Leonard Rost, and Johann Jacob Zimmermann.

First, there is strong evidence that certain enigmatical allusions to terror and superstition are understandable if it be realized that what later became known as Halley's Comet was part of the reason for Augustine's falling in with the Manichees. Secondly, the otherwise idiosyncratic emphasis on celestial phenomena early in the fifth book of the Confessions makes sense in view of the fact that two spectacular solar eclipses helped precipitate the religious crisis which left him waiting with 'intense longing' for the coming of the Manichean Bishop, Faustus, to Carthage, where Augustine was then teaching..."

"The development of Ralph Wendell Burhoe's philosophy of religion and science occurred in the shadow of the continuing dialogue about the place of science in American society. Like his friend and mentor, Harvard astronomer Harlow Shapley, Burhoe was distressed and intrigued by the troubled postwar relations between science and religion. Unlike Shapley, however, Burhoe sought to create a new modernism, a blend of religion and science that would allow each to develop and complement the other."

Stresses “the importance of new measurement techniques such as wavelength modulation, electronic amplification, and scattering of atomic beams to the emergence of new tests of Einstein’s prediction, which were perceived by the scientific community as the first ‘clean’ verifications of GRS. In particular, the race to be the first to apply the Mössbauer effect to the GRS problem is described. As soon as the Mössbauer effect was stabilized, it was transformed into a measurement technology that in turn triggered new types of experimental tests of GRS.”

"Chapter 1 deals with the poem's star myths, a subject that is central to Ovid's originality in the Fasti. Far from being ornamental digressions, the star myths form a major part of Ovid's design for the Fasti, supplementing his account of Roman origins by introducing a series of inset narratives drawn from the world of Greek mythology ... The importance of the stars to the poem is indicated by the separate introduction that Ovid gives them in Book 1.295–310, in which he locates the astronomical portion of his poem within the hellenistic tradition of learned poetry and, at the same time, indicates that the stars introduce a set of values that stand firmly apart from Roman male values of careerism and militarism."
